

Leading U.S. Companies Know: Their Customers Want Beauty, Inside and Out.

Wood windows, doors, and mouldings bring the beauty of nature inside. To preserve that beauty outside, companies like Golden State Lumber are changing the environmental standards of the building supply industry. These companies lead their peers in environmental responsibility, as well as in sales.

Take their contribution to the preservation of Chile's endangered forests, for example. Chile is home to one of the world's largest remaining temperate rainforests, a vast region the size of six Yellowstone parks laid side by side. Chile's remarkable biological diversity has met unrivaled destruction in the form of vast farms of pine trees, which are replacing Chile's native forests at an astounding rate. In order to protect Chile's native forests, Golden State Lumber and other industry leaders have committed to buy wood products from Chile only if they are certified by the Forest Stewardship Council (FSC). FSC certification provides the best assurance available that a wood product does not threaten Chile's native forests and native peoples.

ForestEthics applauds these leading U.S. companies. So do their customers.

If you are a customer of a company such as Woodgrain Millwork that has yet to make a commitment to save Chile's endangered forests, please call 1 866 FE WOOD C to learn how you can make a difference.

ForestEthics • 83 C Wiese Street • San Francisco, CA • 94103 • 415.863.4523
info@forestethics.org • www.forestethics.org